THE PRIZE FIGHT.

Brutal Exhibition Condemned by La and Civiliution—The Greatest Evil the Contempt of Law.

Philadelphia Laiger, July 9.

The so-called "sporting event" so long heralded and so elaborately prepared for, between Sullivan and Kilrain, occurred Look and be Youthful as long as you can. yesterday, in exact accordance with the announced programme. There was no interference from any quarter; the two brutes met, surrounded by a multitude of their kind, and, after the fashion of heir kind, fought out the fight to a conclusion, the larger and greater brute de-feating the smaller and lesser one. Be-blood to flow through your veins as in youlsi, will impart to the old New Lite and Vigor; arrength to those whose nerves and physical system have been overtaxed. The tired and women to have the property of the property of clusion, the larger and greater brute defeating the smaller and lesser one. Before the contest began, while it was proceeding, and until news of the result was received, the greatest interest was manifested by a large part of the public. The encounter between the rullhans excited apparently as much concern as did in the old war days a battle for the Usion. The newspaper offices weresurrounded by eager, expectant crowds from morning until night. Everywhere, apparently, the contest was the absorbing object of thought and speech. There would be something past the finding out in this if it were not known that in the nature of all men there prevails a strong, enduring admiration for mere physical courage, a certain respect, even, for the man, or brute, who is willing to stand up and with or without good cause take as well as give blows. Even the prize lighter displays enough of this lowest form of courage to command popular interest.

But there is one fact which proves that the spirit of civilization is more potent in the hearts and minds of the men of America than this natural, secret liking for the display of mere brute courage; it is that it has compelled the adoption of stringent laws against prize fighting. Where the people themselves make the laws only such can be made as the popular will and power decree. The laws of the several States against prize fighting express the common abhorence of such brutal encounters. And express the common abhorence of such brutal encounters. There is one thing that the American people seem yet to need to learn, which is, that it were better that all laws were abolished and crime should stak unrepeaked and unrestrained through our streets, than that recorded law unrepeaked and vital, shall be openly, flagrantly violated by the sufferance or connivance of the people themselves, or of those bound by their public duty to enforce the law. against it, and two of them ordered out the militia of their respective States to prevent it.

Take it at its best, the prize fight is an indefensible brutal affair. It is bad enough that two men should stand up with the premeditated purpose of beating one another into a state of physical disability; to pound each other's faces to a jelly: to maim and bruise each other to the point of non-resistance; but that is the least of the demoralizing, degradency educated of the demoralizing, degradency educated is a state of the demoralizing, degradency educated is the least of the demoralizing one and though the work of it was that it was openly, flagranlly, without any concealment what ever, done in contempt of law, with all the legal aunthorities virtually looking on, for where the crowd of ruffans and gamblers went, to Richburg, Mississippit the Governor and troops of that State could have gone had they so willed.

The prize fight, which was solely a gamblers' and rufflans' and bruises' fight, mercenary and nothing else, was in every way fifterently disgraceful and degrading to all concerned in it, but it was most disgraceful of all, to the society and law which it violated, and whose representatives looked on and saw the law trampled under toot and society dishonored by it.

These brutes of the prize ring fought as the brutes fight—till one fell exhausted and could give or take no further punishment. The ordinary brute is rather their superior in the prize ring, however, as he leaps or crawls over the body of his defeated antagonist is nobler than the human brute, for at least he does not fight for hire and salary.

But, as we have said, the worst part of yesterday's brutal contest was the freedom enjoyed by all the participants in it, whether as principals, backers or spectators, to set the least as an
